Kaiser Insider Sent Me Internal Guidance Concerning Shots and Medications for Newborns

The antithesis of informed consent

Someone inside Kaiser sent me the below internal guidance concerning shots and medications for newborns.

It tells Kaiser employees that the "approach to how we introduce and administer routine newborn … Hepatitis B vaccine" is to "avoid saying 'it's optional' or 'you can refuse' unless directly asked" and to tell parents that "we will be giving" instead of asking consent to give. This is the antithesis of informed consent. Yet Kaiser calls it "excellent patient and family care."

Newborn Medications at Birth – Standard Communication & Scripting

I'd like to take a moment to align our approach to how we introduce and administer routine newborn medications at birth: Vitamin K, Erythromycin eye ointment, and the Hepatitis B vaccine.

These medications are part of our standard of care and play a critical role in protecting our newborns from preventable complications.

How we present this information to families is very important and can significantly influence acceptance.

Key Expectations

- Present these medications as routine and standard care
- Use clear, confident, and consistent language
- Avoid framing as optional unless parents specifically express hesitation
- Be prepared to briefly explain the benefits and purpose of each

Suggested Script for Staff

"As part of our routine newborn care, we will be giving your baby three important medications.

This includes a Vitamin K injection to prevent serious bleeding, an eye ointment to protect against infection, and the Hepatitis B vaccine to help protect your baby from serious illness.

These are standard for all newborns and help keep your baby safe and healthy."

If parents have questions or hesitate, you can add:

"These medications have been safely used for many years and are strongly recommended because they prevent serious complications that can occur in newborns.

We want to make sure your baby has the best protection right from the start."

Additional Reminders

- Provide education in a calm, reassuring manner
- Allow time for questions while maintaining confidence in recommendations
- Escalate to the neonatologist if parents are declining or require further discussion
- Avoid saying "it's optional" or "you can refuse" unless directly asked
- Reinforce that this is routine, evidence-based care

Our goal is to ensure families feel informed and supported, while also reinforcing evidence-based practices that keep our newborns safe.
Thank you for your continued dedication to excellent patient and family care.
Best regards,

TAP – when our son was born, we were told he had been given Hep B without us even being told. The hospital had informed us that no interventions would be made before we were consulted first. It was outright lies. Luckily he survived, but it made him very ill at four hours old.

It's disgusting isn't it, satanic even. Rockefeller medicine in action

How can a medical practitioner pick up a syringe and inject a 4 hour old baby? What is going through their mind? Nothing much I suppose, they are effectively brainwashed to implement "protocols" so no thinking required

It's admitted that US medicine industry causes at least 250k deaths per year. So 2.5 million every decade. That is just the admitted figure [AI will confirm]. So you can bet that the real figure is a LOT higher. Vaxx deaths are unlikely to be included, many others too I'd guess
